

Tenuta Ammiraglia Alie 2019

Climatic trend

The 2019 growing season varied greatly. After a cold, dry winter, the plants began growing very early, starting in March. The coldest and rainiest period in late spring slightly slowed down the growth of the vines and resulted in the water reserves being restored in preparation for what was to be a hot summer. When it came time to harvest the grapes, the vineyards were in excellent physiological shape. The favourable summer weather conditions resulted in very healthy grapes with excellent phenolic ripeness and exquisite aromas.

Vinification

Alie's secret lies in the combination of the features of the terroir, the management of the vineyard and, of course, the human element. Once harvested, the grapes were quickly transported to the cellar in order to protect the bunches. One of the highlights of Alie's production is the crushing stage. In the absence of oxygen, the bunches are loaded whole into the press. The pressure applied during this phase is of the utmost softness and delicacy. This process, together with the careful selection of the must and its subsequent decanting for no less than 12 hours, eliminates all the vegetal components that could otherwise make the wine unpleasant. Fermentation took place in stainless steel vats at a controlled temperature of less than 20°C. After ageing on fine lees for a few months, including a subsequent period in the bottle, Alie 2019 is finally ready to entice and captivate through each sip imbued with passion.

Organoleptic Notes

Alie 2019 stands out for its extreme sensuality. Its pale pink colour with peach nuances immediately expresses its intriguing personality. The sharp and unmistakable bouquet melds with the fragrances of fresh and ripe fruit. Salted notes return on the palate. Flavour and freshness are well balanced, with Alie 2019's persistence making it an elegant, fine wine.
